The Kinetic Family Drawing Interview Questionnaire (KFD-IQ), a tool used to assess family dynamics and emotional behavioral issues in children and adolescents, was developed by building upon previous research, such as the Kinetic Family Drawing (KFD) created by Burns and Kaufmann. This new framework, known as CRDS, consists of three key components: composition of a family (C), relationships among family members (R), and dynamics of family activities (D). The KFD-IQ aims to provide therapists with an additional resource to use in conjunction with the original KFD or its revised version for comprehensive analysis.
